MOTIVATIONAL STRATEGIES

• The VoiceThread participants contributed to in the previous online assignment will be used to begin the lesson discussions.

Relevance • Participants use examples of their own instructional design practices throughout the module.

 The Jigsaw activity calls attention to the risks of having the Boston University National Emerging Diseases Laboratories in the Roxbury community.

• Hands-on training will be provided to walk participants through the part of the session involving the use of Google Drive.

• Examples provided of problem situations have a comedic twist which will make for a relaxed atmosphere.

• Collaboration to complete activities will provide a sense of accomplishment.

Activities

1. VoiceThread Review - This activity introduced in slide 4 of the presentation links to VoiceThread to review what participants previously stated about Weimer's third principle to guide "Facilitated Teaching."

2. Key Components of Personal Design - In this activity, a list is of key components faculty apply to current design practices is created on slide 5 using the Eno stylus to write responses and capture the image of the slide for posting on the LMS.

3. Fictional Case Study - This activity requires participants to consider their previously created collaborative list as they watch a fictional case study of a problem course. This is followed by discussion prompts asking participants to identify key design components such as objectives, assessment strategies, and instructional strategies and to determine what changes might be made to align the problem course.

4. Jigsaw Activity - This is a 2 hour activity, where participants will work in 4 teams of 3 people. Each team will be assigned one design focus component, based on L. Dee Fink's "Integrated Course Design" model. Each team will work independently to complete a worksheet on Google Drive. All the teams will share their worksheets then come together to discuss and negotiate what changes need to be made to ensure the course is aligned.

Assessments

Formative assessment will be provided for the Jigsaw instructional design activity during and after session both verbally and in writing. Worksheets completed by teams will be reviewed with feedback to the group using the Google Drive commenting tools as well as a post in the Moodle LMS. The planned outcome for this activity is an integrated design plan for a fictional workshop calling for all RCC faculty to provide Pandemic Survival Training to thousands of applicants from the Boston area hoping to prevent Sweating Sickness (an epidemic last seen in England in 1578).
